THE HIGHEST FORM OF LEADERSHIP:

Contribution

The measurement of our leadership and life effectiveness will come down to one thing: Contribution. We can't take our title or position with us. The greatest influence and impact comes from developing and pouring ourselves into other people. The highest form of leadership is servant leadership. We treat employees as valued resources instead of tools, customers as allies rather than challenges we will see a shift in our income, our impact, and our organizational bottom line.

Key takeaways:

- 5 Levels of Contribution: Where it starts and how it can be developed
- What defines and measures our life
- Defining our Why and using it as the fuel to succeed
- The 3 Parts of a Human Being and Why it's significant for Leaders

Adam H. White III

Adam,

I want to express my gratitude for the opportunity to participate in today's MAASE discussion and webinar. I am walking away with a strong desire for reflection and next steps. I want my time in this life spent serving others, and although I believe that has been my path, I am beginning to understand how much broader and deeper my service could become both personally and professionally. Finding gratitude, drawing lines, embracing change, building relationships, building leaders and honoring those we serve - all powerful messages among the wealth of others discussed. Please know how much you are appreciated.

Most sincerely,
Michelle DeJaeger

Adam White

FRIEND,

Let's take this journey of servant leadership together. We all have a hidden leader inside of us and my life purpose is to help you and your organization discover it.

I exist to develop Servant Leaders. Leadership is not a title or a position but who you are. No position or title can ever give us value, but we have to bring value to the position

Whether you realize it or not, you are a servant leader. If you serve your family, serve your community, serve your organization, then you are a servant leader. Let's change the world together.
